BUILDING AN EDUCATION COMMUNITY ONLINE

Joni Miltenburg | Kevin Saito

The Taylor Institute Teaching Community is a hub for educators to share and engage with postsecondary education resources, reflect on their teaching, and form valuable connections with colleagues around the world.

COMMUNICATE

- Enables educators to connect to a network of their colleagues.
- Prioritizes openness and access for users at the University of Calgary and around the world.
- Educators can connect to materials and resources related to postsecondary education, shared by other educators.

- Open communication is a vital component of the Teaching Community.
- Fosters conversations among colleagues through discussion forums and comments.
- Email notifications to engage users on an ongoing basis.
- Intuitive design to lower barriers to participation.

- Home to a curated collection of teaching resources created by educators, for educators.
- Members can share materials they have found useful and catalogue them using tags and categories.
- Bookmarks and subscriptions enable members to personalize the site according to their interests.

COLLABORATE

- Collaboration is a natural outgrowth of the site's design.
- Creates a scaffolded environment for educators to conduct inquiry on their teaching by promoting critical reflection.
- Sharing with other educators allows community members to benefit from their colleagues' expertise.
